

More good years, together.

Your pet's plan for life — from the very first hello.

A LOOK AT WHAT'S COMING

WHY WE EXIST

We build for the pet.

Great companies are customer-centric. Ours is pet-centric — because our customer can't read the label, compare the plans, or tell you where it hurts.

So every choice at Clovara starts with one question: does this make his life easier, longer, or better? If the answer is no, we don't build it. If a product doesn't earn its place in his routine, we don't sell it. If the science is only half-sure, we say so — out loud, on the screen.

His family gets the second promise: you'll always know where he is, what he needs, and what's coming next. No guessing at midnight. No panic at the vet's front desk. No fine print when it matters most.

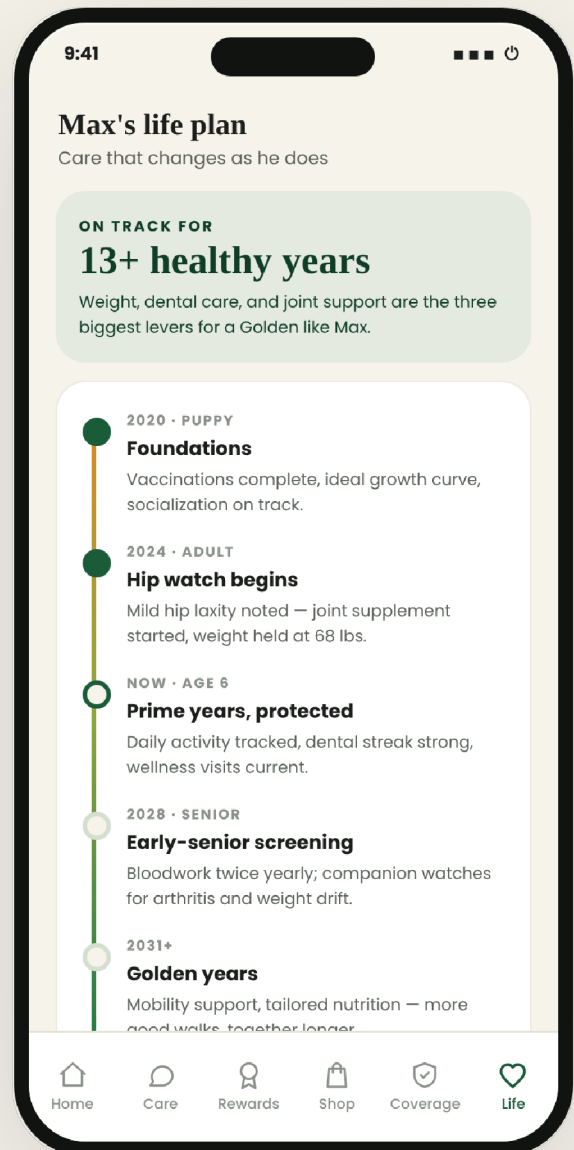

*"The pet can't speak for himself.
Everything we make speaks for him."*

This is Max. Clovara has known him since day one.

In 2020, Max came home at nine weeks old — ears too big for his head, a family equal parts thrilled and terrified. That week, his plan began: sixty seconds of questions, and a map of his whole life, built from what veterinary science actually knows about golden retrievers like him.

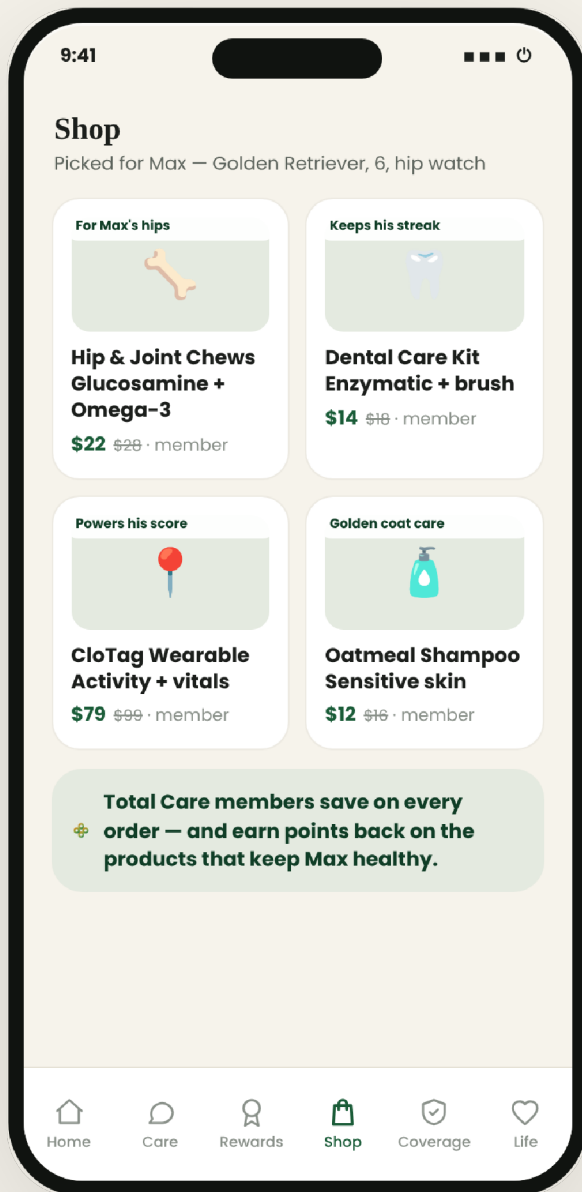

His first vaccines, the socialization window that shaped his confidence, teething, the growth curve — each arrived in its moment, not as a search result at midnight.

- ✿ The journey starts the day they arrive. A puppy's first sixteen weeks shape his whole life — so that's when the plan is at its busiest.
- ✿ Every stage, mapped ahead. Foundations, prime years, senior screening — his family sees what's coming years before it comes.
- ✿ Every year, understood more. Visits, weight, habits — his story compounds into care that keeps getting more his.

2020 • Week 9 • Hello, Max — his plan begins

Made for the dog he is right now.

A dog doesn't need forty thousand products. He needs the few right things for this exact chapter of his life — and a family that isn't left guessing which ones.

When Max was a puppy, his shelf held teething chews soft enough for new teeth, a crate sized to grow with him, and food portioned so a big breed wouldn't grow too fast. Today it holds hip & joint support — because he's six, because he's a golden, and because his vet flagged his hips two years ago. Clovara's shelf is built from his plan, not from a warehouse.

Every product says why it was chosen for him, in plain words. And when he outgrows something, it quietly leaves the shelf. The shelf grows up with the dog.

✿ Members pay less on everything — and earn rewards on the products that keep him healthy.

✿ Honest labels. Where the evidence for a supplement is mixed, the card says so. In this aisle, that's radical.

He'll tell us — before he can tell you.

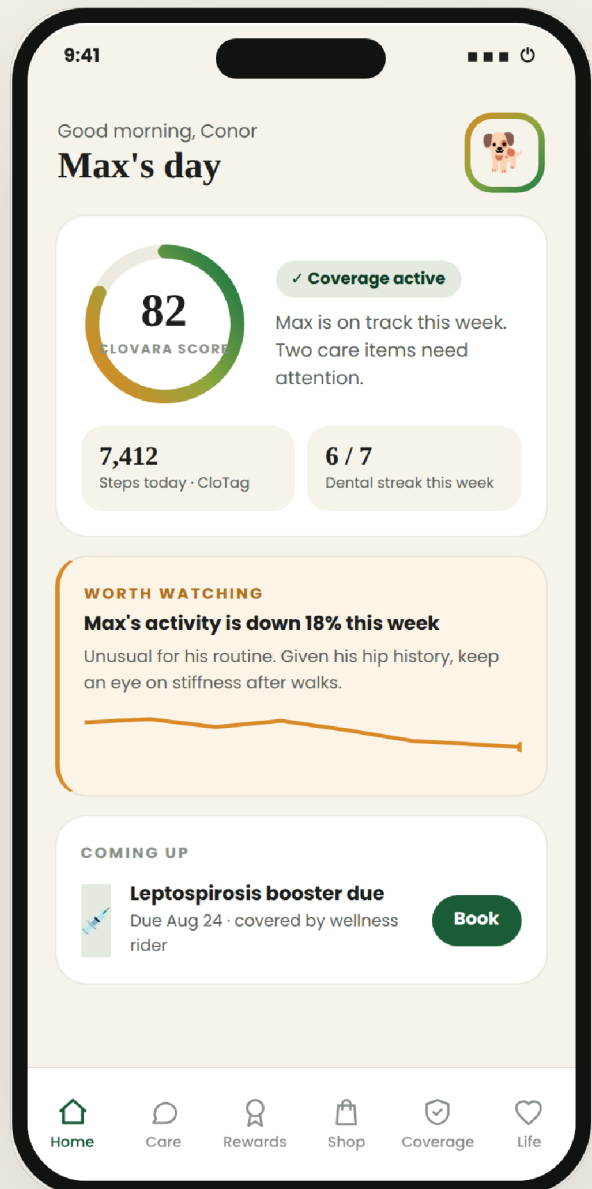

Most of a dog's healthy years are won in the quiet part: weight held steady, teeth brushed, walks kept up, checkups on time. Small things, done consistently, for years. Clovara makes the small things effortless — a score his family can see, streaks that reward the habits that matter, one glance each morning.

And it watches for the things a family can't. This week Max's activity is down 18% — years of his own rhythm say that's unusual, and given his hips, worth attention. His family hears about it while it's still a question, not an emergency.

The rewarded habits are the healthy ones.

Walks, dental care, checkups — points for the things that genuinely add good years, redeemable on his products and care.

One little ritual, every year. Each birthday his plan is re-drawn from the year he actually lived: "Max gained half a healthy year." Families frame that.

Ask at 11pm. It remembers everything.

"Max has been limping after walks." Every pet parent knows this moment — the worry, the search results, the guessing.

Clovara answers differently, because it knows him: it recalls the hip note from his 2024 checkup, connects it to what's happening now, tells his family what to watch for — and books a video vet with a one-page summary of his history already prepared.

It informs and connects; it never diagnoses.

Licensed vets decide his care — Clovara just makes sure they, and his family, walk in knowing everything that matters about Max.

 Private by design. These conversations exist to help Max — they're never used in underwriting or claims.

Protected from day one — when it means the most.

Puppies eat socks. Seniors slow down. And the best time to protect a dog is before he has a history — covered young, nothing that comes later is a "pre-existing condition."

Because Clovara has known Max since his first week, protecting him took one tap, not one afternoon — his plan already held the answers. And when the sock happened, his family sent a photo of the vet bill and had their answer in hours, not weeks.

- ✿ Coverage that completes the plan — not a separate thing to shop for, compare, and dread.
- ✿ Routine care, given back. His wellness rider returns money for the visits and cleanings he should be having anyway.
- ✿ Prevention and protection, finally together. The same plan that keeps him well is the one that pays when he isn't.

Plan. Care. Protect.

Everything Clovara does fits in three words a family can hold onto — and all three come from the same place: a plan built around him, from the day he arrives.

Plan

Know where he is and what's next — his healthy-years outlook, his stage of life, and what's coming, from first vaccines to his golden years.

Care

Do the right things, easily — answers that remember his history, habits that earn rewards, and a shelf picked for the dog he is today.

Protect

Covered when it counts — insurance that already knows him, claims answered in hours, and routine care given back.

One simple membership.

Everything above, for every pet in the family — try it free, cancel anytime. Because the promise isn't a feature list. It's the years.

Honesty is part of the design: where the science is strong, we say so. Where it's still emerging, we say that too — on the screen, in plain words.

More good years, together.

Clovara gives your pet a plan for life — know what's ahead, do the right things daily, and be covered in hours when something goes wrong.

CLOVARA · CONCEPT PREVIEW

Screens, products and pricing shown are illustrative. Coverage subject to policy terms.